CANADA AT WAR...

This is the first of a series of five articles written by Bruce M. Pearce, editor of The Simcoe Reformer, for member papers of the Canadian Weekly Newspapers Association, in connection with the recent tour of Eastern Canada military camps, munitions plants, R.C.A.F. Schools and naval yards, made by a group of prominent weekly, daily and trade newspaper editors and publishers. The first article is general in nature, summarizing impressions of the trip and outlining the various highlights encountered en route. Subsequent articles will deal with the Army, the War Industries, the R.C.A.F. and the Navy.

By BRUCE M. PEARCE

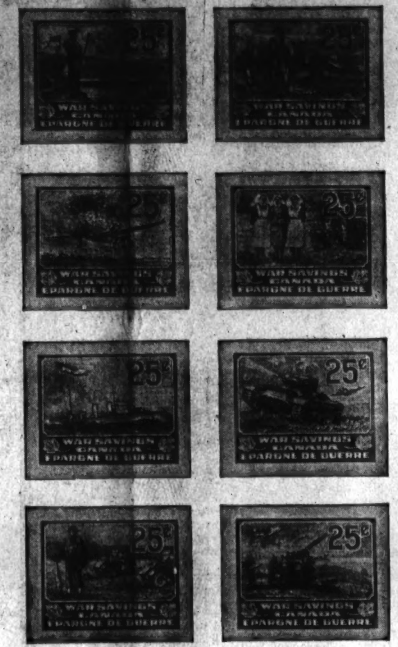

On the morning of August 23rd last a group of nearly fifty representative Canadian newspapermen assembled in Hamilton to commence a journey that is probably without precedent in Canadian journalism.

On the night of August 31st, eight days later, they arrived in Montreal to complete the last leg of a trip which had taken them to the Atlantic coast and given them a complete panorama of the great war giant which is rapidly taking form in Canada.

Sponsored by the Department of National Defence, the tour was initiated primarily to give the editors an insight into Canada's military and industrial activity and to provide them with an enlightened conception of what is actually taking place in this country. That the editors would be able to discuss more intelligently in their columns the various phases of Canada's war enterprise.

That the editors gladly embraced this unique opportunity may be taken for granted. Hereafter they had known all too little of the inside story of the huge machine which constitutes Canada's contribution to the fight against Hitlerism. Not being in a position to inform their readers, the majority were inclined to give voice to the growing impatience on the part of Canadians at the apparent lack of all-out effort. Until the fall of France in June, 1940, it is probably true that Canada had done all too little. That is no longer true today. The truth is that Canada is rapidly shaping a formidable war machine that will have a notable part in licking Hitler. In the short space of eight days, the Canadian editors were treated to a spectacle that not only literally opened their eyes but inspired pride and strengthened faith in the part that Canada is playing and will play on an ever-growing scale in aiding the Mother Country.

Canuck Lumberjacks, Cutting Scotch Pine, Aid Battle of Atlantic

HISTORIC HIGHLAND GLENS TAKE ON ATMOSPHERE OF
CANADIAN TIMBER CAMPS—
FORESTRY CORPS HEALTHY, HAPPY AND BUSY.

By KIM BEATTIE

Among the happiest, healthiest and most valuable Canadian troops now in the British Isles are the Canuck lumberjacks, sawyers and millhands who are cutting great stands of tall Scottish pine in the highlands of Scotland. Twenty Canadian lumbering companies of the Canadian Forestry Corps are located in scattered camps through the wide stretches of Scottish forest lands, and are hard at work turning out rough lumber for war purposes.

Since the first company arrived early last winter not a man has been replaced owing to ill-health, and the real worth of the large-scale Canadian lumbering operations being carried on in Scotland can be estimated by the effect on the Battle of the Atlantic. Canadian mills and lumbermen are turning out 200,000 board feet of Scottish timber a day, which means thousands of tons of shipping diverted to food, guns and gear for the Empire's armies.

Headquarters of the Canadian Forestry Corps is in the country of the late Lord Loveth who, in the World War, commanded the British Forestry Corps in France and under whom the Canadians served. The lumbering camps and mills are distributed through the northern shires in the real Highlands and among the famous glens and burns of folk-song and story.

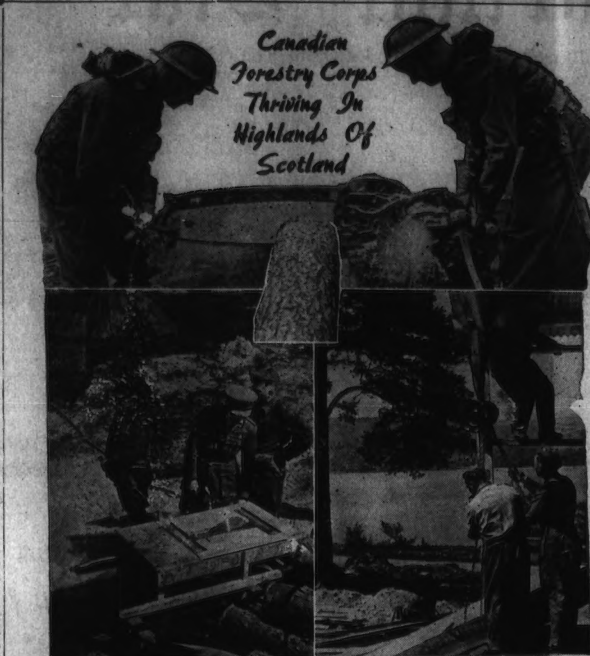

Brigadier-General J. B. White of Montreal, who commanded the Canadian Forestry Corps in the First German War, when Canuck lumberjacks labored in both France and Scotland, is again in command.

FIGHTING FORESTERS

In the last war the foresters were noncombatants, but this time they are trained and equipped to fight as well as lumber. They march, act and are armed like the first-line infantry troops and will prove themselves good fighting troops in the event of invasion.

The khaki foresters began arriving in Scotland last Christmas, with the first company (from the Head-of-the-Lakes) cutting timber within twenty-four hours of landing. Within two weeks the first mill was set up. More than a dozen standard Canadian sawmills are now in full operation, supplementing the small Scottish mills.

Operations and equipment are completely Canadian. High-riggers

Twenty companies of the Canadian Forestry Corps are lumbering in Scotland to save of the Canadian engineers and shipping for other war needs. Above is the modern power "back saw" of the Canadian engineers and foresters. Below, left, Lieut.-Gen. A. G. E. McNaughton closely examines forestry equipment. Below, right, foresters raise the back-saw for one of the scores of new lumber mills they have erected in the Highland areas.

from British Columbia, tractor men from Northern Ontario, gang-bosses from New Brunswick, hunkies from the Albertan foot hills swinging peevies, and skilled men from the Quebec and Maritime bush, even provide an all-Canadian lumbering cross-section. Working beneath the picturesque crags of Scotland are men from Trill, Mission, Nelson, Merritt and Salmon Arm, B.C.; from Chicoutimi, Murray Bay, Beauharnois, Calumet, LaTouche and Gatineau Hills of Quebec; from Long Lac, Fort William, Port Arthur, and Thunder Bay in Ontario; and from Woodstock, Bathurst, Saint John and Fredericton in New Brunswick.

LUMBERJACK TOGS

A score of Highland glens have taken on the atmosphere of Canadian river and timber country. Last winter the lumberjacks wore the heavy makinaws which our north country winters popularized, over their battle-dress. Officialdom subdued the lumberjack's love of color, however, and there were no lurid crimson and vivid pied patterns in evidence; they were a uniform blue with blue R.A.F. chevrons on the sleeves. (The mechanics in the Corps wear the black beret of the armoured trooper; the Forestry Corps badge is a Canadian spruce over a beaver and maple leaves.)

The lumberjacks took with them hundreds of the huge Canadian iron stoves which can be seen in any of our lumber camps. They have also added an item to army rations—baked beans. Camp beans and stoves were listed as "absolute necessities" for the lumberjack, who insists as adamantly on his bunk-house and stomach comfort as he thrives on hard work and frost.

One of the most important men in each camp is "O.C. Bacon," the N.C.O. detailed to take charge of the pigery. When the camps discovered they could not dispose of their swill, they bought pigs and now raise their own bacon. They are also growing vegetables.

STREAMLINED MILLS

The native Highlanders are a bit awed by the extent of the daily fall of timber and by the despatch with which it emerges as white planks, props and poles. Team-work in the woods is an old story and secret to the Canadian lumbermen; his speed, efficiency, power tools and equipment are objects of curiosity and generous approval in Scotland.

Gangs of cutters are followed by saw-swinging trimmers. Smoothing caterpillar tractors and two-wheeled "sulkies" then roll into action. With a lurching, thrashing rush they snake the trimmed logs down twisting bush trails to the conveyor belts of the new stream-lined, Diesel-powered lumber mills where the five foot saws are singing.

Wide swaths are being slashed through the forests, which are one of Scotland's great contributions to the war. Some of the trees crashing down before the advancing lumberjacks are 200 years old. The Canadian jacks may soon be cutting in the Royal forests, the King having offered his Highland timber stands to the cause.

The Canadians are cutting the tall Scotch pine; it is "medium timber," smaller than British Columbia fir, of course, but heavier than the average run from the Maritime Provinces. The stands of soft pine in Scotland might be compared with Ontario timber.

CAMP SPORT

Sport is a feature of life in the Canadian lumber camps. There was a skeptical Scottish audience for the first soft-ball game held on a village soccer field. The piper had previously set the scene for a Highland athletic gathering, with tests of skill and strength, such as caber tossing, and soft-ball was both an innovation and a disappointment. The spectators remained silent to the end.

But despite Highland scorn of baseball, the northern Scottish shires have taken the Canadians to their hearts. There is no Canadian unit hater in the British Isles, certainly none is more comfortable or contented.

All the timber the present Canadian establishment can cut in the next twelve months has already been "crushed," and ear-marked. Many more Canadian lumberjacks could be used and would undoubtedly be welcomed by the British Ministry of Supply.

THE URGENCY OF WAR SAVINGS

While "we are in the presence of a crime without a name" it would be a major tragedy to lose both the war and the peace. That is the ominous probability of a headlong plunge into a period of wartime pleasures spending. A greater degree of saving is an urgent need of the moment.

The cry from all the lips that speak to us across the no-man's-land of the Atlantic ocean is for more and more materials. Our ability to produce the materials of war in satisfactory quantity is limited by our physical capacity and time. Our only hope lies in diverting peace-time operations to wartime requirements.

Diversion of productive facilities is effected in either of two ways—voluntary or otherwise. Financial measures, such as by taxation and borrowing, are useful and play an important part, but the part they play is dependent upon the measure of public support they receive.

In the Victory Loan drive, Canadians added to their laurels, and the measure of their effort in this direction will make pleasant reading when the final figures are issued from Ottawa this month. That, however, is water over the dam, and War Savings is now in need of support. This is the movement in which the greatest number of Canadians can put their shoulders to the wheel.

War Savings is a twice-blessed effort in that dollars invested in War Savings Certificates do double service: they do not compete with war effort and they stand ready to take up the slack for the peace-time readjustment. Dollars diverted from non-essential spending at this time leave room for the expansion of production needed for the men overseas.

PROPER ADJUSTMENT OF CAR SAVES GAS

Any motorist would like to cut his gasoline bill from 40 to 45 per cent on a 5,000 mile trip. How this can be done was shown in the gas saving exhibit in the Electrical Building at the Canadian National Exhibition.

The display under the auspices of the Oil Controller's Office in the Department of Munitions and Supply, emphasizes that it is patriotic to save gasoline. It stresses also that it is profitable.

It shows how an ordinary car like the lever-priced, medium-sized one in the exhibit, may be put into condition so as to give increased mileage per gallon and drastically cut the cost of gas consumption. Such a car uninspected and unchecked will use 41.7 gallons of gasoline in a 5,000 mile trip, giving only 12 miles to the gallon, whereas the same car, properly examined and adjusted, will use only 22.7 gallons of gas and give 22 miles to the gallon. At 31 cents a gallon, gas consumed by the unchecked vehicle would cost $129.25 whereas that used by the adjusted motor would be $70.30. In other words the driver would save $58.95 on the 5,000-mile trip. And he would have saved 190 gallons of gasoline with which to bomb Berlin!

It's a sprightly looking vehicle that forms the centre of the gas saving exhibit, all decorated as it is with red ribbons and plumage. But it has the whistles and the chokes and a flat-tire tire. The gaudy decorations are for a purpose—to call the attention of the onlooker to the 17 ways of saving gasoline. An enormous card on the roof of the car lists the 17 points, while a ribbon flows out from each one to the part of the car where, properly adjusted, the wastage could be prevented. One point emphasizes the wastage caused by improper air pressure in the tires. The tire on the right front wheel is seven pounds below normal; bring it up to normal and the motorist will get another two miles to the gallon. H. York, who is in charge of the exhibit, and assisted by John Roy, explains to the interrogator.

Six or eight months ago, everybody believed that a majority of the American people were clamoring for war. Then, as pre-British-American newspapermen began probing the sober public opinion of the country in dead earnest, we learned with disappointed surprise that our cousins across the international line were not nearly so enthusiastic as we thought they were. It was true, we learned, that many millions of them were highly sym-

"(3) No person or corporation other than a country elevator as defined in The Canada Grains Act or the holder of a lien or charge shall have priority over all other claims, liens, privileges or encumbrances on such crops as set out in The Crop Liens Priorities Act, in prior to the lien created by this section, shall receive or accept any or any part or share of any crop grown on land in any municipal district or any part of the proceeds of the sale of any such crop, until all taxes owing in respect of such crop have been paid.

"(4) Any person or corporation other than a country elevator who takes, receives or accepts any or any part or share of any crop or any part of the proceeds of any such crop other than as permitted by this section, shall be liable to the municipal district or any part of the proceeds of the crop so taken, received or accepted.

HELP CANADA'S SEAWARD DEFENCE

Buy War Savings Certificates

In the early months of the war, and, indeed, up until the first half of this year, Britain was accused, with some justice, of dealing too kindly and negligently with small states which were inclined to play a double game with both Britain and the Nazis.

Something between the ruthless brooding of Nazi Germany and foolish complacent benevolence was felt to be the course Britain should pursue in such instances.

There was a decided stiffening of the British attitude in the case of Syria. And now the Persian incident has made it clear that Britain refuses to be tricked and trifled with any longer by limorous nations which wish to sit on the fence and enjoy the protection of both sides.

There is quite definitely a new, grim element in Britain's humor. There is a disposition, not to be hard, but to be tough. Many feel that this change is something that has been required for many months.

Japan has taken a minor place in the news this past two weeks because of the negotiations with the United States which appeared, at one time, to promise at least a partial settlement of the differences that threatened the peace of the Pacific.

There is no report that these negotiations have been broken off. There is no indication that they have failed. There is still in evidence a marked anxiety on the part of one section of the Japanese public to amicably adjust relationships with Britain and the United States.

Yet in spite of this lack of either good or bad news, an uneasy feeling is growing that the pro-Axis mischievous element in Japan are taking the lead again.

THE LITTLE PEOPLE OF ENGLAND

by MRS. VALLANCE S. PATRIARCHE

"THEY carry no weapons, wave no banners, chant no stately measures of poetry, these little people of England. Pale clerks, laborers with stiff, gnarled hands; old fishermen and young mechanics; housewives, washer-women, nurse-maids and chaps, and tired children singing underground fit to break your heart.

"THEY climb to heights of glory as if born to sacrifice and heroism, scaling the peaks by humble paths and mean alleys which turn to pits of flame; or attaining the summit of valor through dark and cruel descent into the icy waters of the sea. Like soldiers they have borne the shock of fire and shell; like sailors they have gone down unflinchingly to their death in shattered ships, and like aviators they have given their strength to rise 'By Labor to the Stars.'

"NO Abbey walls have space to record the deeds of these simple ones, gone sadly or gallantly to eternity. Their names shall not be graven on stone nor painted on glass; no Roll of Honor could set them forth. But the dust of England, the winds which whisper in her trees, the waves which beat upon her shores, shall vibrate with the passion of their courage, the splendor of their sacrifice. Each dawn shall tell how they arose in humble cheerfulness to fight their tiny corner of the earth with a candle of faith, each sunset shall be a flaming beacon to remind all men of their burning steadfastness."

It is possible that Japan, or at least the jingoistic party in Japan, has held itself down because the resistance of Russia has depreciated, for them, the value of the Axis connection.

That apprehension appears to be passing.

We may look for a resumption of sensational news from Japan in the near future.

CANADA AT WAR

Not only did these men utilize every waking moment to answer the million questions levelled at them by their guests, but they made sure that every Camp Commandant, every factory head and every officer revealed the whole story and held nothing back. At Ottawa the editors were entertained at a dinner at which Hon. J. L. Ralston, Hon. C. D. Howe and Hon. C. G. Power were the principal speakers. The general impression was that these men were sincerely trying to do a job. They were frank in admitting their mistakes and Hon. Mr. Ralston declared that one chief mistake was in having failed heretofore in letting the light flood into editorial minds that their readers, the Canadian public, might know the true story of this country's war achievement.

A Real Achievement

It is an achievement, too, as these articles aim to tell, not just an 'effort,' a word that fails to give the true emphasis. We would also add that not once throughout the entire eight-day pilgrimage was the word 'politics' heard. The men who were our hosts were far too intensely absorbed in the vital task of sharpening Canada's tools of war to worry for a moment about politics. It was one of the lasting impressions of the trip that these men, many of them dollar-a-year public servants, were out to do a job for Canada, that they were sparing neither strength nor talent to perform that service, and that they were admirably fitted for the key posts which they occupied. The same applies to the industrial leaders, the military camp commandants, the chiefs of the navy and air force, with whom we came in contact. They gave the impression of being on top of their job, and they inspired confidence by their brisk, alert and confident bearing. Many Canadian editors are resting more easily as a result of those contacts.

Not a Joy-Ride

Where did we go? What did we see? What did we learn in those eight days? If any reader has the impression that it was simply a joy-ride at government expense, we can only say that it was the most strenuous joy-ride that most of those editors had ever experienced. From 8 a.m. until late at night we were walking miles through military camps, in and out of barracks, machine shops and airdromes, through huge munition factories, naval dockyards and arsenals. We were bounced over hill and dale in trucks, tractors, carriers, buses, buggies and many other of those frightening vehicles which form the mechanized and armored army of 1941. (We saw not a single horse except on a back street in Halifax and we learned that only nine horses remain in the Canadian army and they are headed for the glue factory.) We were driven about in open army trucks in weather that penetrated to the marrow; we were embused and debused until we loathed the sight of a bus; we were thumped by the depth charges tossed from a destroyer on the broad Atlantic; we travelled some 3,000 miles by train and were finally disembarked in Montreal on a Sunday night in the midst of a downpour of rain. We forgave all except the sharp nudge of a heartless porter every morning at 6:30 a.m. Yes, a joy-ride indeed!

Highlights of the Tour

In concluding this initial article, just an outline of a few unforgettable highlights. There was the astonishing demonstration of tracked or armored fighting vehicles and wheeled passenger or load-carrying vehicles at the General Motors proving ground near Oshawa, featuring movement over the roughest ground which put the machines to the sternest test and which proved convincingly that Canadian industrial genius is prepared to meet the challenge of mechanized warfare. There was the nocturnal visit to the National Steel Car plant at Hamilton where several thousand men are turning out artillery and anti-aircraft shells, with the largest output of any similar factory in the British Empire. There was a Sunday morning preview of that remarkable exhibit by the Department of Munitions and Supply at the Canadian National Exhibition, giving a vivid portrayal of the achievement of Canada's war industries. At the Inglis plant in Toronto, apart from viewing the production of Bren machine guns in full swing, we were addressed by Major Hahn, who earlier in the war was severely mangled by two sections of the press, but whose enterprise and ingenuity have created one of the most integral units in Canada's war machine.

Tanks, Planes, Guns

On we travelled to Camp Borden and Petawawa, names inseparably linked with the Great War, but which have undergone tremendous expansion in the past year, where impressive displays of Canada's armed might were provided. In Montreal a procession of Canada's newest tanks roared up and down the street in front of the all-Canadian factory in which they were produced, while at the Fairchild aircraft plant we watched huge bombers being constructed and assembled from start to finish. Then there was the memorable morning at Sorel where the magnificent new 25-pounder artillery guns are being forged and where corvettes are coming off the stocks at a rapid clip, all under direction of the now famous Simard brothers, whom we had the privilege of meeting. On to Valcartier, another name imperishably associated with the days of 1914-18, where we met French-Canadian officers and men and gained new insight into the military situation in Quebec. Then to Debert, that great new military camp hewed from the backwoods of Nova Scotia, final training point for Canadian troops bound for England. Lastly, Halifax, a story in itself, where the great pulse of Canada's war activity beats an accelerating pace and where we rode one of the fifty American destroyers to sea and dined at Admiralty House with the Commodore and his staff. Too many other places we journeyed, many new acquaintances made and stirring stories heard. Here a man from Dunkirk, another from the sunken Fraser, one who had just flown from England or another about to board a bomber from the Old Land, heroes of the Battle of Britain and men from London who had lived and worked through the blitz.

In succeeding articles we will try to tell the story of Canada's army, navy and air force, of the turning of the tide and of the future that is writing a new and glorious chapter in Canada's history and which may revolutionize the Dominion's entire future. Certain it is that since the fall of France a little more than one year ago, a miracle has been wrought. While Canadians fumed impatiently, the keen brains of Canada's military and industrial leaders were working night and day to draw the blueprint of Canada's magnified war machine and to set in motion the wheels that would make her contribution to the Empire cause one of which every Canadian may rightly be proud.

A Short Short Story — IN MEMORIAM ...

BY LESLIE HAMILTON

Chug—chug—chug, the little single-cylindered motorcycle coughed and spluttered as a uniformed post office telegraph boy struggled to manoeuvre this carrying-contraption through the traffic which cluttered the quaint old English village street.

"To add to the boy's difficulties, dusk was falling rapidly over the North Durham countryside and, to make matters still worse, there would be no light at all after darkness had descended in earnest—not in a country becoming accustomed to the infernal black-out regulations.

Still, it was all in the day's work, the lad smiled, readily to himself, this carrying-on under ceaseless raids by German bombing planes. A bit nerve-racking at first, and a bit rough on tempers at times; but what couldn't be cured must be endured, that's all there was to it. "Forty-six," the boy muttered under his breath, impatiently straining his eyes to pierce the gathering darkness and decipher almost obliterated house numbers, whenever he was lucky enough to find any.

"Ah-ha—here it is!" he heaved a sigh of relief, braking to a jarring stop before a neat middle-class bungalow. Dismounting from the motorcycle, he dropped the parking stand, swung the machine into rest position and, unlatching the gate between a carefully clipped green hedge, walked slowly up a winding path to the door of the freshly painted residence of the widow Brown.

Curious eyes peering out from behind the curtains of adjoining houses, watched the slow, hesitant steps of the telegraph boy with keen interest as he approached the door of Mrs. Brown's cosy little home. The buff colored envelope in the messenger's hand, coupled with the laggard step and reluctant air of the boy himself, spelled bad news. In fact, the arrival of telegram these days, especially where some member of the recipient family was away on active service, usually did spell bad news; and, as all the neighbors knew, Mrs. Brown's only son John, who had joined up in September, hadn't been heard of for several weeks now.

Tap—tap—tap, the knocker affixed to the newly varnished door—as the messenger announced his arrival to the occupants of the cottage—sounded almost sinister in the still, ghostly twilight.

"Mrs. J. B. Brown?" the boy queried in an interrogative tone of voice when the door opened in response to his knocking and a motherly old soul of middle age appeared upon the threshold.

"I'm Mrs. Brown," came the anxious answer, the woman's eyes—in which lurked a fear of what the visit portended—instinctively darting to the message which the boy held out for her acceptance.

"It's your John," the widow Brown exclaimed in a voice of sudden alarm, feverishly tearing the flap of the envelope to read the dreaded message it contained. "Oh God—I knew it!" she moaned, scanning the brief War Office communiqué which advised that her son, Private John Brown, of the 5th Yeomanry, had been severely wounded in the course of duty, and then died in hospital a few days later.

"Dead!" the stricken woman gasped, signing the messenger boy's receipt book with the mechanical motions of an automaton.

"Is it bad news?" a kindly neighbor who entered, silently after the post office boy had departed, enquired, throwing her arm around the shoulders of the sobbing woman.

"John . . . is . . . dead!" came the heart-broken answer. "He died in hospital a few days ago."

Sorrowing friends looked after the sealed packet which arrived at Mrs. Brown's a few days later—sealed, so their heads sadly after sifting past the bluer and laying a simple floral tribute upon the coffin, which was draped from end to end in the folds of a Union Jack.

"A fine, likeable lad he was," said many an old village gaffer, shaking their heads sadly after sifting past the bluer and laying a simple floral tribute upon the coffin, which was draped from end to end in the folds of a Union Jack.

It was a grand funeral too, all the village turning out en masse on that particular day. The local branch of the soldiers' organization provided conveyance for the close mourners, and even the county bus services had been cut in half that afternoon in order to allow as many of John's pals as John having been a bus driver before enlisting—to attend the ceremony.

The village squire, who was a colonel of Yeomanry, also rose to the occasion and despatched a pall-bearing party as well as a guard of honor from the nearest military depot. The town church, fortunate enough to possess a volunteer band, did their bit by providing music and playing "The Minstrel Boy" in remembrance of John's faithful attendance at services when he was at home, and the Scout unit of John's school turned out one hundred per cent in memory of an ex-Gub of former days.

Leaving the Brown's home promptly at two-thirty, the procession proceeded slowly along the old High Street, passing between solid ranks of bowed and bareheaded townsfolk who had all known John as a boy and a young man, and, wending its way over the hill and under the grim north country parish, finally reached the cemetery where John's father, who had died a few years previously of gas wounds received in the last war, was buried. As a matter of fact, John's grandparents were buried there also, in the small family plot, sacred to the memory of many a deceased Brown of Centerville.

The local parson took charge at the graveside where, after a brief service by the hero's old Sunday school teacher, the guard of honor fired a volley over the final resting place of a comrade and the bugler played the "Last Post" to the accompaniment of a low, muffled roll upon the drums of the volunteer band from the village.

Chug—chug—chug, a military motorcycle exploded a few days later as a tall, bronzed and stalwart dispatch rider drew up in front of the widow Brown's. Striding through the gate in the neatly clipped hedge with the assurance which only long familiarity with the surroundings could have given him, the khaki-clad figure of the young man who had dismounted from the motorcycle, disdaining the knocker upon the newly varnished door, opened it without the slightest hesitation as he eagerly walked into the hall and called in a cheery voice of greeting: "Hello—mother! Where are you? It's John!"

When the Widow Brown had recovered from her collapse—occasioned by the return of her son from the dead—it transpired that John's death, as reported by the War Office, was all a "heavily" mistake.

Far from being wounded and later dying in hospital, John had never even been sick a day since he joined the army, the fond mother and her excited neighbors were told by the lad himself who, now that the situation was explained, understood the reason for the wretch of lovely flowers which his mother had brought to lay on his grave that very afternoon.

"We'll go to the cemetery just the same, John," the Widow Brown said during the momentary silence which ensued as everyone struggled to adjust themselves to the shock of a life time. "Whoever that poor lad up there may be, he's some mother's son, you know, and I think she would appreciate another, grateful, mother expressing her thanks to God for the return of her own boy by remembering you or other who, in giving his life for us all, will never go home again!"

VITAMINS DEFICIENT IN THE CANADIAN DIET

One of the most serious deficiencies in Canadian diet is a lack of vitamin B<sub>1</sub>, according to an article in the Canadian Medical Association Journal. It is also suggested that lack of this member of the vitamin B complex indicates a corresponding deficiency of all the other seven members of the group.

This lack was made evident by dietary surveys carried out in Halifax, Quebec, Toronto and Edmonton. The article quoted, and its authors comment: "... a large proportion of our population are consuming diets which are inadequate for optimum vigor, efficiency and resistance against disease. . . . The importance of this situation from the national standpoint and the need to rectify it is obvious, particularly during the present crisis when the highest degree of efficiency of all Canadian people is absolutely necessary."

Whole wheat, the article points out, is one of our richest food sources of vitamin B<sub>1</sub>, and also a good source for most of the members of the B complex; but in milling for white flour it retains only a quarter to a sixth of the original B<sub>1</sub> content and loses all but a small percentage of the other B complex members. The remedy, the authors point out, lies in improving the B<sub>1</sub> content of flour used in making Canadian bread.

Since Canadians as a whole refuse to accept whole wheat bread, they assert, the problem resolves itself into either retaining the B vitamins in white flour, or giving it those vitamins in one of two ways: the use of a special high potency yeast, or the addition of various B vitamins in synthetic form. Since both of these methods increase the cost of bread production, and since the latter is not entirely satisfactory, they suggest that the retention in white flour of the vitamins present in the wheat berry is the obvious procedure to be adopted.

The authors state that a milling technique, which results in a flour similar in appearance to ordinary white flour, but which retains from 50 to 65 per cent of the vitamin B<sub>1</sub> of the wheat berry, has already been developed. It also contains increased amounts of other members of the B complex, and its use in place of the present white flour would increase the Canadian dietary supply of vitamin B<sub>1</sub> alone by 100 to 150 units per person per day.

Adding that the new technique requires only minor changes in present milling machinery, so that the flour should be produced at only a slight increase of cost, the authors say: "It is hoped for the consumer's protection that very shortly it may be possible by government regulation to designate specifically this flour and the bread made from it."

COOKING
Good cooking makes it possible to serve appetizing meals from low cost nutritious foods.
Cereals.—Soaking cracked or rolled cereals in cold water overnight shortens cooking time.

Eggs.—Slow cooking with low heat does not toughen eggs. A meringue cooked slowly does not separate and run as does the one quickly browned under a hot flame. When eggs are expensive, 2 tablespoons flour replaces 1 egg for thickening. When a recipe calls for egg whites, use yolks in salad dressing, cookies, etc. Fruit is easily canned at home for winter use. Sugar added during cooking tends to toughen stewed fruits. Meat should not be cooked at too high a temperature. Cheaper cuts need long, slow cooking in moist heat.
Soups.—A stock pot made from bones, gravy, vegetable water, leftover vegetables, makes excellent soup. Vegetables.—Cook in small amount of water and save every drop. The juice on canned vegetables should also be used. Do not overcook vegetables. Keep crisp and flavorful. Salt added during cooking preserves color. Soda should not be added as it destroys vitamins and flavor.

A Short Short Story—Help Wanted...
BY LESLIE HAMILTON
"It's no good, Agnes. I've talked to your father until I'm blue in the face, but he won't hear of it."
"Why not?" the attractive young woman addressed as Agnes demanded of her father's assistant manager as they sat facing each other across a lunch table in a metropolitan cafe.
"He says that you lack initiative. For one thing, and that he won't be held up by family considerations in a matter of this kind."
"Do YOU also think I lack initiative?" came the provocative answer from the girl, a look of determination settling on her charming features.
"By no means," the other exclaimed in horrified protest. "Personally, I think you will find a way to do it, but how to convince your father is the problem that worries me."
"Suppose we practice a little of that initiative that father says I haven't got?" she suggested, darting a roguish twinkle at her vis-a-vis from a pair of sparkling blue eyes.
"You know you can depend on me," the willing victim of feminine wiles responded with alacrity. "How do you think we can work it?"
"The rest is up to you," Miss Agnes smiled at young Trask as they left the cafe some time later. "If you do your part, I'll do mine!"
"I'll manage it somehow, never fear!" the other assured her, tipping her hat in a courteous farewell.
"Girls! Girls! Girls! They'll drive me mad!" the harassed and exasperated father of a scheming daughter exploded to Mr. Trask as the two men conferred in the executive's private office later in the afternoon.
"It's certainly a difficult proposition, finding an efficient secretary these days," the assistant manager agreed.
"I've never seen such a parade of movie starlets, gun chewing, jitterbug crazy females as we've had from the employment bureau during the past week. Eight different girls in as many days," he snorted derisively, "and not one of them with sense enough to come in out of the rain."
"They were a droopy lot, all right," young Trask commented. "What about Miss Agnes, sir?" he ventured after a brief pause. "Don't you think you might give her a trial, in spite of your noted objections on the subject?" The business college she attended speaks very highly of her capabilities, you know.
"If you persist in mentioning my daughter in connection with a position in this office, Mr. Trask," came the angry retort. "I'm afraid you'll find yourself looking for another position; so please drop it. I should never consider it!"
"Very well, sir," the assistant acquiesced, covering up a discreet smile with a gentle cough.
"Have you any ideas on how we might find the right sort of a girl," the executive enquired after a moment's pause. "Something different might bring to light someone of aggressive and positive personality."
"What about a striking advertisement in the evening papers?"
"What do you mean: striking advertisement?"
"Something that will catch the eye, and draw some unique replies."
"Good idea, Trask. I think that will draw someone," his boss commanded him, surveying the copy of the following advertisement prepared for insertion in the daily press:
WANTED—A girl of tact, initiative, ability and experience in the duties of a secretary to a business executive. Must be a good shorthand typist, neat dresser, absolutely trustworthy and punctual in habits. No flappers or old maid wanted. Same thing goes for beautiful but dumb

Doris, and for all those who only think they can pound a typewriter. If your spelling is atrocious, and your grammar of the second grade variety, don't waste your time answering this advertisement. If you fancy yourself as a mannequin, or a model for a cigarette poster, don't waste our time either, as this is a business establishment, not a movie studio. On the other hand, if you do possess the qualifications demanded, a good position in a pleasant office at a generous salary is available immediately. Apply in first instance by letter only to Box 752, Evening Gasette.

"This is going to be good," laughed Miss Agnes to young Trask, whom she had met by appointment that evening. "I'll compose an answer to this that will make Pop eat his words, or I'll know the reason why."
"There's but to do and die!" her companion smilingly answered, leaving the girl to write what they hoped would prove a boomerang for the lion in his den.
"This letter in answer to our advertisement seems to be from an exceptionally bright and aggressive young person, sir," Mr. Trask beamed at his chief the next day, laying the literary effort of the scheming Miss Agnes upon the desk before her father.

At Point of Mailing.
Any Time, Any Place, Anywhere, Box 752, Evening Gazette.
Dear Sirs:
I note your meticulous requirements in the person of a secretary to the head of your esteemed establishment, as same were aired in the leading evening rag of this fair metropolis, and therefore hasten to make inquiry as to who this paragon of the business world can be, demanding such a pure, golden, eighteen carat specimen of the female gender.
I am, to say the least, considerably intrigued by this position which demands such an extraordinary stenographer.
Your advertisement appeals to me strongly, stronger than prepared mustard; in fact, for I have searched Europe, Alsace, Alsace, Alsace, and what not in search of the superman who can use my outstanding talents to the best advantage.
When it comes to chin music (and I don't mean the package chewing variety either), I have never found a man, woman or telephone that could get to first base with yours truly, either fancy style or, catch as catch can.
I write shorthand so fast that my pencils are especially equipped with platinum points. My notebooks, likewise, are specially manufactured of asbestos, covered with bull hide, ruled with sulphuric acid and stitched with cat-gut to withstand my highly inflammable copy.
I use an A.K. model double unit typewriter exclusively, and will guarantee to deliver my rated horsepower under either A.M.C.L. or S.A.E. standards continuously. I am not subject to belt slipping, gear stripping, or any other sort of stripping, but operate at peak efficiency load under all sorts of conditions.
I have been passed by the National Board of Censors, and am guaranteed under the Pure Food and Drug Acts as free from poisonous cosmetics, hallucina, athlete's foot, all varieties of B.O. and do not touch liquor of any kind—either straight, compounded or diluted.
My frame is a pneumatic riveted, seamless hand buffed and hydraulically welded, drop-forged, oil tempered specimen, ground to one thousandth of an inch specifications. My endurance is therefore limitless, although my clothes, approved by the Woman's Good Taste in Dress Society, are not, and need replacing periodically, a factor which has a great bearing upon the salary I can afford to accept, should I decide to entertain your offer.

If you would care to arrange an interview in order to contract for my services, kindly communicate with me c/o the local Windjammer Club, marking the envelope Private and Confidential.
Unless you are prepared, however, to foot the tariff for one of my outstanding accomplishments, and it's a tariff that's well up in the income tax bracket classification, don't bother me at all, as I'm a very busy woman and cannot waste my time on fruitless interviews.

I am.
Yours honestly (believe it or not) MISS ALWAYS ALERT.

"Get hold of this girl at once!" the executive ordered Trask after reading the foregoing letter. "There's a girl in a million! Offer her thirty dollars a week to start. As a matter of fact, make it thirty-five if she can start this afternoon."
"Very well, sir," Trask smiled to himself, opening the door and beckoning to Miss Agnes, who had been waiting in the outer office. "Here she is, sir, and hired at thirty-five per week. Incidentally, I'm a witness to the contract, sir, which is legally binding even if only oral, under the circumstances."
"Help! Help! I've been framed!" gasped the astonished executive as his daughter said: "I'll cancel the contract, Papa, for a consideration."
"Florida is such a lovely place for a honeymoon, isn't it dear?" Miss Agnes smiled at young Trask on the sands at Palm Beach a week later.
"Thanks to Dad, who fired the both of us," laughed the happy bridegroom. "Your initiative was simply marvellous, my dear."
The End

"Munkies, which are being shipped in ever increasing volume, must have the first call on our transportation systems, and there will be less space available in future for purely civilian goods," explained J. McG. Stewart, Coal Administrator of the Wartime Prices and Trade Board. "By placing your order for coal now, even though immediate delivery may not be possible in all cases, you will enable the government to make the most efficient use of all transportation facilities."

NO JOINT PROBLEMS with RECESSED-EDGE STONEBORD
Where two lengths of Stonebord come together, there's a true uniform channel. With a broader apply the famous Stonebord joint filler, then a strip of re-enforcing tape as furnished, then smooth off with more filler. The result—a strong, re-enforced invisible joint.
Stonebord comes end-bundled—two sheets taped face-to-face to keep them clean and perfect. Stonebord is smooth, hard and durable, takes any decoration, is vermin proof and fireproof because its core is mineral gypsum.

2nd DIAL REVIEW

Once more, the hectic season of time change is upon us at CJCA, and we have our work cut out trying to fit in all the programs that you people like to hear. However, I think that I can assure you that you won't have too much to worry about... I don't think that this year will be any worse than those in the past and we have managed to survive them and YOU have been able to get most of the programs that you enjoy. Incidentally, time change goes into effect Sunday, September 28th... so you will be hearing all your programs at a new time from then on, and in the majority of cases that new time will be one hour earlier.

From what we hear, everyone seems to be glad to be able to welcome Charlie McCarthy and Mortimer Snerd back to the air.

Those of you who used to enjoy Joe Penner and his program will find an old friend on the current "Hap Hazard" programs. O'Day, the night clerk with whom "Hap" has so much trouble, is played by Phil Kramer, the fellow who used to greet Joe Penner with "Hallo Joe"—remember him?

Studio Officials looking for Jack Benny, who is due back on the air Sunday, Oct. 5th, will have to send search parties to scour the beaches near Los Angeles. The Jell-O-Jester has a daily schedule worked out. Immediately after breakfast, he leaves his Beverly Hills home for the beach—and he never reveals which beach.

When Percy Faith, "Carnation Contender" conductor, first started in radio, he was the piano-playing member of a comedy team called Faith and Hope. The team lasted a year during which time Faith spoke only once—that was when "Hope" left the studio during a broadcast, and the piano-stricken pianist stood up and yelled "Come back!"

There has been much controversy lately over the individual merits of "Sweet" versus "Swing"—and for those of you who like your music sweet, then I can't do better than to advise you to tune into Guy Lombardo and his orchestra with the voices of Carmen Lombardo and Kenny Gardner every Saturday evening at 5 o'clock. This program of today's popular dance tunes is proving a popular attraction.

STUDIO BRIEFS... "Amos 'n' Andy", heard currently at 8:30 p.m., were first heard in 1919, but under another title—Edward G. Robinson of "Big Town" fame, owns a pistol which once belonged to Billy the Kid—Ocell B. DeMille of the "Lux Radio Theatre" has made more than 60 outstanding film hits... listen to the Radio Theatre every Monday at 6 o'clock.

And that signs 30 until next week!

LONG SERVICE

For thirty-five years this Farmers' Company has been at work for western agriculture. Its customers have benefited directly in the satisfaction they have found in marketing their grain or in buying farm supplies. All western farmers have benefited from improved business standards set by the Organized Farmers in business. And western agriculture as a whole has also been served as the Company, by itself sometimes and often with other organizations, has represented it before governments and governmental bodies, and before the public.
